The video above is a nice example of a simple, short story that Murray tells, seemingly impromptu, to a question from the press during a panel interview for the film The Monuments Men. Most people may think nothing of this tale from his life, but it's a great example of the everyday kind of real-life memory from one's past which holds a lesson or a gem of wisdom.

So please observe the 10/20/30 Rule of PowerPoint. If nothing else, the next time someone in your audience complains of hearing loss, ringing, or vertigo, you'll know what caused the problem. One last thing: to learn more about the zen of great presentations, check out a site called Presentation Zen by my buddy Garr Reynolds.

Innuos may have just the right solution in their ZEN Mini MK3 (US$1249/€999), the gateway to their ZEN range of server/streamers. The ZEN Mini MK3 is absolutely not a feature-light proposition. Rather, it focusses on delivering what I'll call the "core" music server functionality, to the fullest and without too much additional complexity.

Big, bold, flood fill images are great, and an easy way to make your slides stand out. But it's not all about pictures and Presentation Zen; inevitably you'll need to place other content onto your slides, whether that's facts, figures, charts, or even dare I say it... bullet points. This is where the use of white space in presentation

Presentation Zen was published ten years ago. Al Gore won his Oscar for a film based on a presentation in 2006. Amazon sell more than 38,000 books with 'presentation' in the title, and more than 7,500 with 'PowerPoint'. Which all sort or raises the question Why are so many presentations still crap?
